avoiding negative economic implications for our state.

Senate President Pro Tempore Jonathan Dismang and Speaker of the House Jeremy Gillam were both outstanding in their management of the business of the Senate and House of Representatives.

He also effectively managed to reach compromise on the Religious Freedom Restoration Act (RFRA) thereby

As for the League's proposals, most of the highpriority items from our 2014-2015 Policies and Goals were enacted. They included:

- Act 339 pertaining to elections by Rep. Mark Lowery;
- Acts 235 and 233 pertaining to organizational meetings and elimination of obsolete election procedures by Sen. Missy Irvin and Rep. Betty Overbey;

- Act 384 by Sen. Bart Hester and Rep. Boyd pertaining to filling vacancies in City Administrator cities; and
- Act 1059 by Rep. Charles Blake authorizing city bid preferences.

Several Acts that have the possibility of generating substantial litigation were enacted. Act 1002, the Private Property Protection Act, was such an enactment. Sen. Jim Hendren, who has advocated similar bills in the past, was receptive to addressing some of the concerns of the League even though the stars were probably aligned for him to have a pretty good chance to pass his bill without concessions. We think his acceptance of some language from a Texas law that had proven to be fairly workable in that state enabled us to join states with regulatory takings bills in a manner that hopefully will not be problematic.

Act 975 by Sen. Hutchinson and Rep. Bob Ballinger, the RFRA bill was modified, as previously mentioned, to mirror a federal RFRA law enacted in 1993 and signed by then President Clinton. It remains to be seen how much litigation will result there and how much modification to local ordinances will be necessary.

Act 137 by Sen. Bart Hester and Rep. Ballinger, which was allowed to become law without the Governor's signature, attempts to prevent local anti-discrimination ordinances. It will become effective 90 days after the April 22nd adjournment and will very likely result in litigation.

Act 896 by Sen. Bill Sample was submitted to improve the fairness of tax administration. The effect on cities, towns, and counties will be to allow an additional six months for businesses to claim a rebate on local sales taxes if more than $25 is paid on a single transaction.

Current law provides a six-month period to claim the rebate as of August it will extend to one year. As introduced, the claim period was to have been three years, but the change to one year was made in the Senate and then passed in the House. The State Chamber of Commerce, who requested the bill, has reported that our state's business friendliness rating will now dramatically improve.

Copies of the new Acts pertaining to municipalities, along with additional explanation, will be provided at the 81st League Convention in June.

On behalf of the League staff, we would like to express our appreciation to the members of the Legislature who always gave our positions courteous consideration. We believe Arkansas cities will utilize the new laws effectively in helping Arkansas become an even greater state. Please thank the Governor and members of the General Assembly when you have the opportunity.

Municipal Health Benefit Fund Board waives mid-year rate changes

he Municipal Health Benefit Fund (MHBF) Board agreed to waive mid-year rate changes because of the program's stability when it met May 1 at League headquarters for its second quarter meeting.

The Board received the auditor's report of 2014, discussed program enhancements, reviewed current finances, discussed next month's Business Meeting at the Convention, and had one claim appeal. The audit report was very good, as was the current financial report. The possible program enhancements will be presented next month at the Annual Convention for possible additions to the program at the next quarterly meeting.

Because of the growth and stability the program has been experiencing the past few years, the Board decided to forego any mid-year rate adjustments this year. Advancing the review by a month for first of the year changes was also discussed. It was felt finalizing those first of the year changes in October would assist participants with their budget preparations.

> The Annual Business meeting of the MHBF will be held on Friday, June 26, along with other League Business meetings, beginning at 8:45 a.m. at the Statehouse Convention Center in Little Rock. Audits will be presented along with possible benefit changes and election ounty equalization boards will meet Aug. 1 through Oct. 1 to equalize the assessed value for all acreage lands, city and town lots, other real property and personal property. "Equalization" means to adjust the valuation of property in order to bring about a uniform tax rate (ACA § 26-27-315; Black's Law Dictionary). The boards will meet as often as necessary during this time to complete their work (ACA § 26-27-309). If a county's ratio of assessed-to-market value is out of compliance, the equalization board may meet after Oct. 1, but no later than the third Monday in November (ACA § 26-27-311).

County equalization boards to meet in August

County equalization boards have two responsibilities: (1) to review and equalize overall county assessments as assessed by the assessor, and (2) to hear assessment appeals by property owners. The board begins the review of assessments on Aug. 1, when the county assessor delivers the completed assessment records to the county clerk, who serves as the secretary for the board. Assessment appeals from landowners begin no later than the second Monday in August (ACA § 26-27-317).

Cities and incorporated towns have a part to play in deciding who sits as a member of the county equalization board. Cities and incorporated towns select one member of a five-member board (counties with a population less than 79,000) and two members of a nine-member board (counties with a population greater than 79,000) (ACA § 26-27-303 and 304).

To select county equalization board members, city and incorporated town representatives within the county shall hold a meeting during the month of May of each year in which the terms of any of the members of the county equalization board shall expire (ACA § 26-27-304(b)(2)(A)). The mayor of the city or town or his or her designee shall serve as the representative of his or her city or town (Id.). The mayor of the county seat shall be the chair of the meeting, and if there are dual county seats, the mayor of the larger of the two seats shall be the chair of the meeting (Id.). Those at the meeting shall select the member of the board via majority vote, and each city or town shall be entitled to one vote (Id.). No action shall be taken unless a quorum is present. A majority of all of the representatives of all cities and incorporated towns in the county shall constitute a quorum (Id.).

Marion remembers Sultana tragedy

arion marked the 150th anniversary of the Sultana steamboat disaster with the dedication of a new memorial and museum opening Sept. 23. Several hundred people attended the commemorative events, which also included historical lectures, a musical performance, and tours.

Tourism a priority for Walnut Ridge mayor

By Andrew Morgan, League staff

Walnut Ridge's Beatles connection has brought thousands of visitors to the city's museum and park in recent years, says Mayor Charles Snapp.

his may be Walnut Ridge Mayor Charles Snapp's first term in that office, but his public service stretches back a lifetime, both in elected office and as a volunteer focused on tourism in his city and Lawrence County. He previously served on the city council about 20 years ago, and he unsuccessfully ran for mayor twice during that period. He then left local politics for a time and focused on his business.

"I had an overdose of the entrepreneurial spirit," Snapp says. "I was one of those that believed if you could dream it, build it, and make it a reality that it would work."

That spirit runs in his family, who in 1932 moved over from Independence County and bought a Ford dealership. That dealership marked the establishment of his family in the area, and it coincided with the growth of tourism in the state, which depended on the automobile, Snapp says. His family capitalized, building a restaurant and hotel and getting into the tourism business.

Following that family tradition, Snapp and some friends opened a waterfowl hunting service in 1978. He also filmed local outdoor TV shows in the area, on and off for about 15 years, he says.

Along with the entrepreneurial spirit is a real community spirit, and Snapp has volunteered his time and expertise on several projects. He took a prison work crew and built a fishing pier at Lake Charles State Park (which is named for his uncle, Charles C. Snapp, a former Arkansas Game and Fish Commissioner), and helped construct one on the city park pond.

He retired from the outdoor and hunting business about six years ago but had a desire to stay involved in his city's development. An opportunity presented itself when the president of the Walnut Ridge Chamber of Commerce asked him to be a part of a new tourism-focused committee.

"One thing led to another and for the next four years I was a full-time volunteer as tourism director, and then the last year and a half I also volunteered with industrial recruitment and commercial development."

All cities have to find what makes them unique and utilize that aspect, Snapp says, and for Walnut Ridge, the Beatles are that unique connection. The Fab Four's plane landed in Walnut Ridge on a quiet night in September 1964 when the group was on its way to a ranch in Missouri for some weekend relaxation before heading to New York. The brief stopover may be a footnote in the Beatles' history, but it's a lasting memory and tourism attraction for Walnut Ridge, which has developed a museum dedicated to the group and their visit, and a Beatles park featuring a sculpture depicting the famous Abbey Road image of the group crossing the street. The city's Guitar Walk also taps into the area's musical heritage along Hwy. 67, aka the Rock 'n Roll Highway.

From left, Snapp, 2014 Miss Arkansas, and Arkansas Department of Parks and Tourism Director Richard Davies at the 41st Arkansas Governor's Conference, where Snapp received a Henry Award for his volunteer efforts.

His numerous volunteer experiences led Snapp to consider another run for mayor, more than 20 years after his previous attempts.

"I got to thinking, you know, if I can help lead in this manner and provide this much as a volunteer on the outside, I think I can do more from the inside. That's when I decided to go ahead and make another attempt and run for mayor."

Now as mayor, Snapp has received broad recognition for his volunteer efforts. He received the Outstanding Volunteer Service Award at the 2015 Henry Awards, presented in March at the 41st Arkansas Governor's Conference. He is quick to share that honor.

"I know how the quarterback feels," Snapp says. "The award was given to me, but there was a whole line of people who helped develop those efforts."

Little Rock hosts women's soccer team from Newcastle, England

The women's soccer team from Northumbria University, Newcastle, England, pose for a group shot after a friendly match against the University of Arkansas at Little Rock in early April. Newcastle upon Tyne has been a Little Rock Friendship City since 1999.

he women's soccer team from Northumbria University from Newcastle, England, visited Arkansas in April for matchups with University of Arkansas at Little Rock, Hendrix University, and Ouachita Baptist University. The Little Rock Sister Cities Commission hosted the visit.

"Newcastle and Little Rock share much in common, such as our underlying economic base and being hubs of activity for our regions," said Bryan Barnhouse, co-liaison to Newcastle and commissioner for the Little Rock Sister Cities Commission. "We also both love sports. The Commission and our partners are happy to bring the British passion for soccer to central Arkansas."

In addition to the games played with the three universities, the trip included a meeting with Gov. Asa Hutchison, a tour of the Capitol, and a visit to the Clinton Presidential Center.

Little Rock has a longtime Friendship City relationship with Newcastle upon Tyne. While the Northumbria team came to compete, they also taught at local youth clinics and experienced Little Rock and the region. The women made lasting friendships along the way. Not only were the soccer/football matches fun for spectators, the team was also able to tap into the roots of what makes Arkansas such a special place. Consequently, they want to come back for more next year and at least one of our universities wants to send a team to England.

Newcastle has been a Friendship City with Little Rock since 1999 and has exchanged youth leadership groups, cultural organizations, and business and economic development missions. The Little Rock Sister Cities Commission serves to foster relationships between the City of Little Rock and its Sister City partners across the globe by promoting mutual cross-cultural understanding, providing regular interaction and informational exchange, and creating economic development opportunities. # National Town Builders Association meets in Arkansas

Participants, which included several Arkansas municipal officials, in the National Townbuilders Association spring roundtable kicked off the event in Bentonville before visiting Conway, Little Rock, and North Little Rock to tour examples of sustainable urban development in Arkansas he National Town Builders Association (NTBA) held its Spring Roundtable March 20-22 in Arkansas to focus on "Making and Remaking America's Downtowns." The group, a collection of urban and new urban real estate development professionals from across the country visited The Village at Hendrix in Conway, the River Market and Argenta in Little Rock and North Little Rock, retirement haven Hot Springs Village, and burgeoning downtown Bentonville.

The NTBA focuses on successful smart growth policies that are economically, socially, and environmentally sustainable.

The event started in Bentonville, where attendees learned about the burgeoning food scene with a dinner at the Tusk & Trotter prepared by Executive Chef Rob Nelson and a reception hosted by Rob Coleman, CEO/ President of ERC, a development firm with a number of projects underway. The next morning after a welcoming cup of coffee from The Pressroom, NTBA members learned how the City of Bentonville, Downtown Bentonville, Inc., and a variety of far-sighted town organizations, civic leaders, and businesses came together to fulfill the vision of Bentonville as it evolved into a vibrant downtown and national destination, starting with its 1,765-acre master plan. After a warm welcome by Mayor Bob McCaslin, Director of Community Planning Troy Galloway and Daniel Hintz, Founder/Chief Experience Architect of Cultural Velocity and former Director of Downtown Bentonville, Inc. led a tour and provided insight to the city's success, including the hosting of weekly meetings to foster essential brain-storming, teambuilding and communication. 21c Museum Hotel and Crystal Bridges Museum of American Art were also on the tour and have contributed to the success of the community.

The Roundtable then headed to Conway to visit The Village at Hendrix, a mixed-use, pedestrian-oriented neighborhood under development by Hendrix College. With its first phase completed, all residences are sold or rented and its commercial Market Square is filled with a mix of businesses. CEO Ward Davis explained the success of The Village began with a new urban plan by one of the top urban planning firms in the nation, Duany Plater-Zyberk & Company and the commitment by forward-thinking college administrators to build a college-oriented Main Street neighborhood where people could live, work, learn, and play.

In Little Rock, pillars of the development community provided the back story of the success of Little Rock and North Little Rock, starting with the downtown revitalization efforts of River Market and the Central Library system. Local leaders stressed the willingness to work toward a common goal, to find solutions—even in the midst of one of the most challenging recessions, and the value of relationships as key components in achieving results. Danny Bradley, John Gaudin, and Greg Nabholz introduced the Argenta Arts District and explained how its mix of housing, businesses, and walkable streets work hand-in-hand to complement both the region's historic urbanism and community building efforts, including Imagine Central Arkansas, a comprehensive community planning process.

ACMA explores ways to fight anti-government attitudes

By Andrew Morgan, League staff

he Arkansas City Managers Association (ACMA) discussed strategies for combating anti-government sentiment at the local level as part of its annual spring conference, held April 29-May 1 in Conway. The ACMA welcomed Dr. Peter Gess, an assistant professor of Politics at Hendrix College in Conway, who shared the results of numerous studies focused on the matter and facilitated discussion about the issue.

When it comes to gauging the public's trust in government, the studies conducted are almost all done at the national level, he said.

"There's very little research, unfortunately, done at the local level," Gess said.

The national trend lines may still be helpful in understanding the big picture, he said.

Gess shared several graphs compiled by the Pew Research Center charting the public's responses to issues such as trust in the federal government, both in general and broken down by political party; levels of frustration with government by age, party affiliation, etc.; general satisfaction with the state of the nation; consumer confidence; and other related questions. There have been some fluctuations over the past few decades depending on which president has been in office, but overall the trend has been downward since the 1960s.

Trust in government tends to dip during a recession and when consumer confidence is low, which can be frustrating for leaders at the local level, Gess said. "Many of you have very little control over the national economy, right?" he asked.

While anti-government sentiment may be strong at the national level, isolated studies suggest a more positive view of state and local governments, those closest to the people, Gess said.

Building trust, even on the local level, is difficult without a spirit of moderation, Hot Springs City Manager and ACMA President David Watkins said.

"The value of moderation is evaporating," Watkins said. "So everything is win-lose."

Gess explored some of the potential causes of distrust at the local level, which could include negative feelings about taxes or fines, not feeling a part of government, ineffective services and policies, corruption and scandals, or just waiting in line for too long at a local office. Even seemingly small negative interactions with government can foster an "us vs. them" mentality, he said.

Gess pointed out several strategies local officials can use to combat cynicism and distrust, such as informing citizens about what services local government provides, and providing information about service performance and any changes in services; holding open meetings and discussions, especially about controversial issues; utilizing PR to portray a positive image, and responding to negative comments in the media; and informing the public about your high ethical standards and then demonstrate that commitment.

ussellville was named Welcome to Arkansas Community of the Year at the 41st Arkansas Governor's Conference on Tourism, held in March in Texarkana. The Welcome to Arkansas program began in 2009 to increase visitors' satisfaction with vacationing in Arkansas and improve customer service by arming front-line personnel with messages about their local community, region, and state.

Russellville joined the Welcome to Arkansas program in 2012. Since then, the city has hosted six First Impressions Guest Service Workshops, which are tourism-focused customer service trainings offered to communities across the state by the Arkansas Department of Parks and Tourism. Russellville has also shown initiative in expanding the reach of the Welcome to Arkansas program by facilitating its own workshops to train even more members of the community.

"In the past two years, more than 70 people from the hospitality industry, retail, nonprofit, and other local businesses have taken advantage of this program," said Misty Lumpkins, communications director of the Russellville Area Chamber of Commerce. "Our chamber has embraced this wonderful program and offers it to the whole community quarterly. Our goal is to roll out the welcome mat because without people coming into our local businesses, there would be no local businesses."

Russellville's participation in the Welcome to Arkansas program has helped front-line workers see the broader role that guest relations has in promoting tourism to Russellville, the surrounding communities and the entire state.

For more information on this statewide program, contact program coordinator Jessica Ledbetter at 501-682-5240 or by emailing WelcomeToArkansas@arkansas.gov.

Ghana-Arkansas collaboration grows

By Sherman Banks

hana, a country on the West Coast of Africa, is one of the most thriving democracies on the continent. It has been referred to as an "island of peace" in one of the most chaotic regions. It shares boundaries with Togo to the east, la Cote d'Ivoire to the west, Burkina Faso to the north, and the Gulf of Guinea to the south. A recent discovery of oil in the Gulf of Guinea could make Ghana an important oil producer and exporter in the next few years.

The country's economy is dominated by agriculture, which employs about 40 percent of the working population. Ghana is one of the leading exporters of cocoa in the world. It is also a significant exporter of commodities such as gold and lumber. Ghana has hundreds of ethnic groups, each with its own unique language. English, however, is the official language, which is a direct product of being a former British Colony.

In August of 2014 the Arkansas Municipal League helped to host a Symposium on Sustainable Agriculture and Economic Partnership between Arkansas's Delta region, and the Volta Region of Ghana. The event offered municipal and district leaders the opportunity to promote agricultural and tourism offers to their respective jurisdictions to potential investors and symposium participants. During the symposium, we also explored how municipalities and communities from the two regions could work together to build strong mutually beneficial and long lasting relationships.

The Volta Region is the most easterly region of Ghana that borders on Togo. It is an area of incredible scenic beauty. The festivals and ceremonies showcase the rich diversity of the history and culture of the tribal life. Ho is the capital city and is an important center of herbal medicine, which seems to be growing in the western world today. The main economic activities of the Volta Region are farming, fishing, livestock, small commerce, and tourism.

During the delegation's visit from Ghana last August they made inquiries about the development of a memorandum of understanding between the National Association of Local Authorities of Ghana (NALAG) and the Arkansas Municipal League.

An Arkansas delegation made a follow-up visit to the Volta Region in March led by Secretary of State Mark Martin. Delegates included Deputy Secretary of State Joseph Wood, UAMS Director of Global Health Don Simpson, the World Trade Center of Arkansas's Denise Thomas, Aristotle Inc.'s Jason Shivers, and myself. We also hand carried two letters of collaboration from the city of Jacksonville and Shorter College in North Little Rock.

We traveled throughout the Volta Region meeting with local, district, state, national, and traditional leaders to explore educational, cultural, economic, and sister city possibilities between our two regions. We made successful tours of selected educational institutions, farming communities, acquainted ourselves with the role of traditional rulers, women's groups, and key places of tourism led by Helen Adjoa Ntoso, regional minister of the Volta Region.

At the end of this most successful trip, we agreed to collaborate in areas such as agriculture, telecommunications, education, and tourism. We agreed to prioritize improving access to broadband internet in the region, facilitated by Aristotle, Inc., in order to improve communications among government and educational institutions, agricultural and traditional leaders and health authorities throughout the Volta Region.

NALAG has proposed the following objectives for the development of collaboration with the League:

- Promote the development of local government through training of municipal officials and through municipal officials exchanges.
- Examine the differences in the processes of how laws are made.
- Examine the differences in how our organizations work with rural and urban cities.
- Examine the organizational differences between the League and NALAG.
- Learn how each group collaborates among local, county, and national governments and with nongovernmental organizations.

A traditional ruler in the city of Ho addresses the conference in March.

To further the commitment of Ghana's Volta Region and Delta region of Arkansas, a proposed list of 50 delegates will be joining us at our 81st Convention this June in Little Rock. The delegation will be lead by the Minister Ntoso and two traditional rulers, Prince Kwame Kludjeson, president and CEO of the Africa Global Sister Cities Foundation, and Prince Kofi Kludjeson, chair of Alltel Technologies Ltd. The delegation will participate in the Convention and will have a booth located in our exhibit hall. ## The best part of leading eadership is hard work. It takes making accurate decisions based often on inaccurate or incomplete data. It requires bringing about change and contending with the resistance that it prompts. It requires caring about those you lead, but remaining objective enough not to get swayed by peoples' suckingup. It takes having a thick enough skin to weather the unending second-guessing and Monday-morning-quarterbacking of critics who assume they could do better than you.

By Bill Treasurer

Given how hard and often thankless the role of leader is, why do it? Why put yourself through all the hardship and criticism? The answer is found in the most satisfying result of a leader's impact: more leadership. One question to ask yourself is this: At the end of your leadership career, what will have made the challenge of leadership all worthwhile? By far the most frequent answer goes something like this: "I will have built other leaders who themselves are building other leaders." When done right, leadership begets more leadership.

The best part of leading is bringing out the leader in others. Always remember that leadership is a privilege. When you're in a leadership role, your influence may affect the trajectories of people's entire careers (and, often, their lives!). When you do it right, you create a legacy of other leaders who can bring their goodness into the world. Here are some tips for helping build a leadership legacy:

- Know thy leadership self—Give some thought to the leader you aim to become, and the mark you hope to leave on others.
- List your leaders—List the leaders who have most affected you. What positive parts of their leadership do you carry with you in your thoughts and behaviors?
- Seek feedback—Invite people to share their perspective on your leadership. Send people a simple e-mail asking them what it's like to work with you, how they would describe your leadership style, and what leadership behaviors are most noticeable.
- Show gratitude—Say "thank you" frequently and sincerely. Let people know that you don't take the privilege of leading others for granted. Leadership is an honor, so be honorable.

To lead is to apply the best of yourself in order to get others to apply the best of themselves. The dividend of great leadership is more great leadership.

Managed intake vs. reactive intake

By Tricia Power

ike much of law enforcement, animal control tends to be reactive: When an animal crime is committed, animal control officers then move in to investigate. What they find dictates their reaction to the violation, whether it be a written warning for not having a pet vaccinated or laying the groundwork for a search warrant due to a significant, large-scale hoarding case.

I spoke recently at the Humane Society's Animal Care Expo with Dr. Kate Hurley, who is the director of the UC Davis Koret School of Shelter Medicine and a veterinarian with a passion for cats. She told me about the , which is a program hosted and funded by Maddie's Fund, an organization dedicated to helping animal welfare professionals in many life-saving facets of their work.

The Million Cat Challenge is a free program challenging shelters and rescue organizations to change the way we do things in reaction to animal homelessness, specifically relating to cats. I have been hearing murmurings among animal welfare professionals for years about how to save more lives, and yet we tend to hold onto the past with both hands clenched tight.

I am as guilty of that as anyone else in this industry.

So, it was with reluctant enthusiasm that I attended my first webinar as a new inductee into the challenge. Not sure what to expect, I put on my headphones and for the next 20 minutes I listened as two shelter managers talked about their experience with "managed intake." Managed intake is just what it sounds like: managing what animals you take in and when. As one of the speakers stated, this isn't turning animals away, it is telling your citizens that the shelter will take your animal, we just prefer not to take it in right now.

You know what happens around this time every year: The kennels are full of intact male dogs, and the feline room is filled to the rafters with pregnant cats. The kittens start rolling in, litter after litter, followed in short order by the puppies. This continues until late fall, when we finally get a moment to breathe.

These organizations were having the same problem. So, they both decided to start asking the public for help. They began to make appointments for owner surrenders, and offered help and advice to owners looking to surrender pets due to health or behavioral problems. They then began to ask finders of stray pets if they could foster them temporarily until the shelter had more space available for the animal, instead of euthanizing for space constraints. What's the worst that could happen? They could say no. If they say yes, then you have one less animal in the shelter, and space available for an animal the person who found it couldn't keep. You've just saved two animals from the streets.

Without realizing it, we had actually started doing just this last year, when litters of much too young kittens would appear on our doorstep. We would ask the finder if they could keep them, at least until they were old enough for adoption at eight weeks of age, or at least two lbs. in weight. We offered a support kit of free litter, food and supplies (all donated) and gave them instructions on when to return for weigh-in and their first vaccinations. We asked them to agree not to give the animals to anyone else until they could be spayed or neutered by the shelter, and then formally adopted from us.

This worked out wonderfully, as we decreased our intake and increased adoptions. Then, we started doing the same with puppies. This change provided much needed relief on overcrowding at the shelter, as well as increased employee morale, as Spring had become a dreaded time of year due to the overwhelming numbers of animals coming in and not enough getting adopted quickly.

Now, our officers in the field also ask finders of stray animals if they can keep the animal, at least temporarily, and ask them to post the animal's information on the Arkansas Lost and Found Pet Network (ALFPN,) www.alfpetnetwork.com. If the owner isn't located in a few weeks, and they can't keep the animal, we will bring it to the shelter. After this confirmed "holding time" has lapsed, when the animal arrives at the shelter it is considered as owner surrendered. Before final prep for adoption, we complete a check on ALFPN, scan for a microchip, and look for any other identification that may have been missed by the finder. If none is found then the animal is vaccinated, tested, spayed or neutered, and released for immediate adoption. This saves space at the shelter for animals that are more challenging to adopt.

Managed intake has been a win-win for all involved. The animals are less stressed, my staff is less discouraged, and our citizens are happy to be helpful to the animals and us. Most importantly, we are saving more lives, and isn't that what we all want?

April 24 at ADEQ's headquarters in North Little Rock.
Fayetteville was an ENVY finalist in 2014, 2013, 2009, and 2008.

Chosen from among six finalists, Fayetteville won this year's award for its "Recycle Something" educational and marketing program designed to increase recycling by city residents and commercial interests. The effort, promoted through local advertisements and public presentations and displays, includes financial incentives for the use of smaller trash receptacles and encourages more recycling. In 2014 the city saved more than $213,000 in landfill costs while earning more than $598,000 through the sale of compost generated from yard waste collections.

"The City of Fayetteville, its citizens and government officials are to be commended for their continuing efforts to improve the quality of life not just within their city limits, but for the state as a whole," said Becky W. Keogh, ADEQ director.

"We believe the 'Recycle Something' program is innovative in its approach to allow individuals to realize direct savings as a result of their actions to reduce waste and increase the reuse and recycling of materials. The educational approaches and community involvement are noteworthy, also, as evidenced by the slogan, 'Be Big; Start Small' used in the campaign. The award today is a testament to Fayetteville's strong commitment to protecting the environment and serves as an example for other communities in Arkansas to follow."

The remaining 2015 finalists were Camfil Air Pollution Control, Goodwill Industries of Arkansas, Kraft Foods Group Inc. (Fort Smith facility), the Lake Fayetteville Environmental Science Center, and the Saline County Regional Solid Waste Management District.

Mindfulness helps us balance life's demands

By Betty Everett, Ph.D.

e live in a society that's always on the go.

Stopping for any reason or amount of time seems to be out of the question. If we're awake, there is some task, whether work or personal, with which we can occupy our time.

But is it healthy for us to continue this lifestyle, day after day, never taking a few moments for ourselves? What if we learned to stop every once in a while and shut out the outside noise? Just to focus on breathing in and out, and the present moment. For those of you who cannot remember the last time your brain stopped for half a second, this glorious-sounding occasion has a name. It's called mindfulness therapy.

First, the obvious question: What is mindfulness therapy? It's a form of meditation that teaches people to be aware in the present moment while being able to take a step away from the current situation for a deeper look.

Mindfulness therapy often starts with a simple breathing exercise. Mastering your breath, in and out, can go a long way to helping you become aware of the moment. When you first start this meditation form, it's best to have a quiet, non-stimulating environment. It makes it easier to focus your mind when there are fewer stimuli to filter out.

As you advance, the goal is to live your life aware of what's going on in the moment, not just in a quiet setting. It's good to remember, this is a practice, so it's not going to be perfection. There is no right or wrong way to accomplish mindfulness. It's simply about keeping your mind focused on what you want to focus on in that moment, and being able to bring it back when it wanders.

It's best to start these sessions in five- to 10-minute intervals. Starting with 30-minute increments probably won't work well, but it is a goal you should have. It's also good to repeat this process through the day. Try it when you feel stress, anxiety, or agitation. Focus on taking a deep breath and calming your mind.

Being mindful, or aware, has plenty of advantages. As you master this therapy, you begin to notice your pattern of behavior and how it affects others. For those who are on the impulsive side, it gives you an avenue to stop before reacting, giving you a moment to think about the most effective way to react to a given situation.

This example portrays exactly what mindfulness therapy is meant to do. It's not just about giving yourself a break from the daily grind of life; it's about affecting the way you live and how you react in everyday situations.

Studies have shown mindfulness therapy can help with anxiety, depression, high blood pressure, overall stress, and other conditions. Part of psychotherapy, in a general sense, is about becoming aware of the pattern of your behaviors and the impact on others. It stands to reason, then, the ability to be aware is helpful for most all psychiatric conditions, as well as some physical health conditions.

Whether you're just beginning the therapy or you're a seasoned veteran, it's important to remember there will always be times you won't be mindful. Whether worry, stress, anger, or anxiety enter your life, it shouldn't get you disappointed in the progress you've made. The practice is learning to bring yourself back from those moments of worry, stress, and anger to be mindful, once again.

Shutting down is hard. It's a busy world with a lot of voices, so it's difficult for many people to quiet their minds. But mindfulness therapy has benefits to more than justify the process.

LR food truck fest named one of country's best

Little Rock's Main Street Food Truck Festival is one of nine food trucks festivals listed by online magazine VacationIdea as one of the "Best Food Truck Festivals in the United States," the Downtown Little Rock Partnership has announced. The 2015 Main Street Food Truck Festival, the fifth annual event, will be held Saturday, October 3.

"Five years ago there was not much on Main Street," said Gabe Holmstrom, executive director of the DLRP. "Now we have a Creative Corridor fully underway with new construction of condos and apartments, restaurants, the Tech Park, and businesses joining cultural attractions such as the Arkansas Repertory Theatre, the Arkansas Symphony, Ballet Arkansas and a wall mural recently completed by Matt McLeod. The festival has been an important part of helping to bring people back to Main Street."

The DLRP also oversees Main Street Food Truck Fridays held at the corner of Main Street and Capitol Avenue each spring and fall.

Entergy to add state's largest solar power plant to grid

Entergy Arkansas will build the state's largest solar power plant by the end of the decade if approved by the Arkansas Public Service Commission, Entergy announced April 15. The state largest electric utility said that Arkansas County's Grand Prairie will soon become home to an 81-megawatt photovoltaic solar energy generating facility, an emissionsfree renewable energy facility to be connected to Entergy Arkansas's transmission grid no later than mid-2019.

"For Entergy Arkansas, meeting the needs of our customers now and in years to come means embracing new technologies in our industry that make sense for our customers and for the communities we serve," said Hugh McDonald, president and CEO of Entergy Arkansas.

Entergy Arkansas's portfolio is one of the cleanest in the country, with 71 percent of the utility's power generation coming from nuclear energy, McDonald said.

The new solar project, called Stuttgart Solar, will feature nearly 500 acres of solar panels and will be capable of generating enough clean energy to power approximately 13,000 homes. A new substation will be built in Arkansas County to interconnect the solar facility to Entergy Arkansas's transmission system.

"This will place Arkansas in a position to grow by creating jobs through attracting new businesses and expanding existing ones, all while keeping our rates lower than the national and regional averages," McDonald said.

In addition to this solar project, from 2014 to 2017, Entergy Arkansas plans to invest $2.4 billion on generation, transmission and distribution improvements to the state's electrical infrastructure.

NWA adds 10,000 jobs, among nation's best

The Northwest Arkansas region added about 10,000 jobs last year and saw a job increase of 4.56 percent, ranking it 26th for job growth among the country's 381 largest metropolitan statistical areas (MSAs), Talk Business reported April 10. Kathy Deck, director of the Center for Business and Economic Research at the University of Arkansas' Sam M. Walton College of Business, and Mike Harvey, the Northwest Arkansas Council's chief operating officer, announced the figures, which are based on figures from the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics. A January announcement incorrectly indicated the region had added only 3,000 jobs in 2014 because the Bureau had lacked some information about the economy, Deck said. The March revisions more correctly measured job growth in trade, transportation, utilities and other sectors.

According to the release, the Northwest Arkansas metropolitan statistical area outpaced larger MSAs such as Charleston, Pittsburgh, and Baltimore.

The MSA is made up of Washington, Benton and Madison Counties in Arkansas and McDonald County in Missouri. Major cities include Fayetteville, Springdale, Rogers, Bentonville, and Siloam Springs.

The region also outperformed areas that the NWA Council had identified as "benchmark regions" in its three-year strategic growth plan. Those regions were Austin, Texas; Raleigh, N.C.; Des Moines, Iowa; and Madison, Wis.

Little Rock hosts 6th Sustainability Summit

Little Rock presented its "Roadmap to 2020" at this year's Sustainability Summit, held April 9 at the Clinton Presidential Center.

he Little Rock Sustainability Summit was held Thursday, April 9 in the Great Hall of the Clinton Presidential Center. Hosted by the Little Rock Sustainability Commission and the City of Little Rock, this annual event allowed for residents to engage with industry professionals who have successfully integrated sustainable practices into their businesses and organizations.

The City of Little Rock also presented its 2020 Sustainability Roadmap, which includes a list of sustainability goals it plans to achieve within the next five years. This strategic plan was crafted after a series of public input meetings held last year. Priorities centering on Energy, The Built Environment, Economic Development, The Natural Environment and Quality of Life will be the focus for the 2020 Roadmap.

The Summit's keynote speaker, John Fisk, director of the Wallace Center at Winrock International, presented on the topic of sustainable food systems.

"Forward-looking cities are investing in the development of local and regional food systems as a way to strengthen and diversify their economies by using the resources they already have," Fisk said. "This includes the passion and skill of their residents, the re-purposing of existing infrastructure and the desire for public-private partnerships."

Fisk explained how the current food system directly impacts the environment, economy, communities, and health. Summit attendees received information on innovative efforts that have been used to develop local and regional food systems and link rural and urban communities, offering access to healthy food, creating business and job opportunities, and driving more sustainable land use.

The Summit also included presentations from Steve Patterson, executive director of Arkansas Advanced Energy Association; Kathy Webb, executive director of Arkansas Hunger Relief Alliance; and Jarod Varner, executive director of Central Arkansas Transit Authority. The group discussed food security, transportation, and energy efficiency.

Additionally, the event featured various personal empowerment learning opportunities for Little Rock residents, including a home energy efficiency showcase from the Pulaski Technical College Weatherization Trailer.

If you'd like to host a similar event in your city or town, contact Melinda Glasgow, Little Rock Sustainability Officer, at mglasgow@littlerock.org for more information.

NLC, other groups support bi-partisan approach to e-fairness

he leadership of the National League of Cities (NLC), the U.S. Conference of Mayors (USCM), the National Governors Association (NGA), and the National Conference of State Legislators (NCSL) has released a joint statement expressing strong support for the bipartisan approach being taken in Washington on the issue of e-fairness, which seeks to close the sales tax loophole for online retail and even the playing field for our local businesses via the Marketplace Fairness Act. Arkansas Rep. Steve Womack is the lead sponsor of the legislation in the House of Representatives.

Salt Lake City Mayor and NLC President Ralph Becker; Utah Governor and NGA Vice Chair Gary Herbert; Sacramento, Calif., Mayor and USCM President Kevin Johnson; and Utah State Senator and NCSL President-elect Curtis Bramble issued the following joint statement: "Today, we had a rare opportunity to meet together, as leaders of four of the largest associations of elected officials in the United States, to discuss how we can work together in a bipartisan spirit, to address our shared goals and issues that are important to our constituents. We had a good discussion on a number of those issues, most notably our strong desire to see Congress close the online sales tax loophole and pass efairness legislation this session.

"As leaders in local and state government, we know the importance of creating a level playing field between our brickandmortar community businesses and online retailers. This would also allow consumers to have more choices through fair competition. Collecting already owed sales taxes means more money for state and local governments to provide basic local services such as maintaining roads and hiring police officers, without increasing the overall federal deficit."

Key questions in planning

By Jim von Tungeln

nswering questions involved in urban planning is a daunting task. Archeologists have unearthed ruins, in Pakistan, of what appears to be a planned city containing structures erected 4,500 years ago. Much has been learned, forgotten, attempted, and abandoned since. Still we ask ourselves today: What are we doing, why and how are we doing it, when and where should we do it, and who is responsible for the task? Good questions. Let us look at them as they relate to the planning function in modern municipal government.

The road leading us the "what" is a rocky one. In an abstract sense, what we are doing in urban planning is making decisions for events that won't occur for some time in the future. To the more practical among us, particularly elected officials, we are trying to avoid some of the resource-robbing mistakes that make preparing the annual budget a yearly nightmare.

To those concerned with economic development, what we seek to accomplish through thoughtful planning is to produce pleasant and well-structured environments that will attract business and industry. More and more cities in our state are realizing the connection between economic growth and planning. As a result, the Arkansas Municipal League will include an expanded session on this topic at its Annual Convention in June.

For the average resident of our city, planning simply means making life simple, allowing free access around town, and protecting the family's most valuable asset, the home. So the question of what planning means often depends upon where one sits, walks, bikes, or drives.

We have, as recently as last month, discussed the "why" of planning. In particular, it is critical that elected officials understand, and can explain to others, why certain plans—and the regulations that enforce those plans—exist. A couple of things bear mentioning as well. First, it is critical to understand that someone will plan your community. If it is not the citizens and their elected representatives, it will be others. These include those who have no reason to consider the health, safety, welfare, and morals of the community. Often, it includes those whose interests consist only of short-term profits.

Another reason to plan carefully and form regulations that are clear, concise, and equitable lies in the possibility of litigation arising from poor or no planning. Cities that have suffered long and costly litigation can attest to the fact that good planning can be worth the cost.

Answering the question of "when" is simpler than the others. The short form is "when you need to." This varies greatly from city to city. Those experiencing rapid growth may find it necessary to update their planning programs frequently to address growing concerns. Cities with stable growth may face such need less frequently. They may need, however, to prepare specific plans designed to promote growth for their city.

From a financial standpoint, larger cities must face the fact that the investment in planning increases with the size of the planning area. So, they try to "get it right the first time." Some are trending away from expensive mapping efforts to more "policy-based" planning. Larger cities in the state also focus on neighborhood planning after general plans have been adopted. Our capital city of Little Rock has concentrated on neighborhood planning and the empowerment of neighborhood residents for years.

The "how" is a question that elected officials and planning commissioners ask frequently. This is a most complicated question and best answered in a much more detailed manner than a short column. The first step is to form a planning commission. A city of the second class or an incorporated town may elect, by ordinance, to allow the city council to serve as the planning commission and board of adjustment. Other cities may create a planning commission of not less than five members, of whom at least two-thirds shall not hold any other municipal office or appointment except membership in the board of adjustment or a joint planning agency.

The legislative body may then confer on the commission the powers necessary to carry out the municipal plan. Space limitations prevent a detailed description here of how to prepare and adopt plans and their implementing regulations. Periodic workshops offer detailed information on these and other planning topics. See www.arkansasapa.org for details. We can't overemphasis the value of training elected officials, planning commissioners, and staff in the intricacies of the planning process.

The "where" a city in our state may plan changed as a result of legislation passed during the 89th General Assembly. In general, a city may establish a planning area within its territorial jurisdiction, which depends upon the population. As mentioned in a previous column, cities now face a reduced territorial jurisdiction of one mile, with a maximum of three miles for the largest city in the state. The statutes governing this are complex and can prove confusing. A city should seek legal assistance when establishing a planning area boundary that extends beyond its corporate limits.

Americans can now travel Interstate 40 from Wilmington, N.C., through Arkansas, to its terminus at I-15, seen here, near Barstow, California, because of questions Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower asked about Germany's Autobahn in the 1940s.

This brings us to the question of who should be planning a community. As mentioned earlier, someone will perform that function. It seems preferable that the "who" should consist of a group composed of citizens, elected and appointed officials, representatives of businesses and institutions, and professionals representing the city's interest. In addition, specific interest groups and key individuals can offer insights that can both enhance and support final planning efforts.

The methodology involved varies greatly in scope and execution. Our state's planning statutes only require a duly advertised public hearing prior to adopting plans or implementing regulations. In modern times, most cities regard this as far too little and make concerted efforts to involve the community in the planning process.

Ultimately, however, it is the elected body that will bear the consequences, both legal and political, of poor or poorly implemented plans. For this reason, we strongly encourage those, to whom the voters have entrusted their city, to question themselves constantly about plans for the future. As a guide, we might bear in mind the line from Rudyard Kipling that we all learned as schoolchildren:

I keep six honest serving-men (They taught me all I knew); Their names are What and Why and When And How and Where and Who.

So, it is good to examine our processes and to question everything, even authority. This includes, of course, our own.

Tree ordinances help cities look forward

"It's not about what it is, it's about what it can become." – Dr. Seuss, The Lorax. By Alison Litchy hile Dr. Seuss's The Lorax is a children's story, it teaches all of us a valuable lesson. In the story, trees have the Lorax to speak up for them. In the real world, trees rely on us. There is no better time than now to start developing a healthy urban forest. Imagine what it could become! Trees will grow with your family. Mature trees benefit a community for future generations.

A great way to protect your trees is to have a tree ordinance in place. A tree ordinance provides legal authority for conducting forestry programs, defining municipal responsibility for public and private trees, passing regulations, and setting minimum standards for management. A tree ordinance provides guiding principles that promote healthy tree development.

Many cities already have a tree ordinance in place, but they have not been adapted or changed over time to meet current needs. Let's take a look at an Arkansas city that has modified their tree ordinance over time.

Bentonville is known as the headquarters of Walmart and is Arkansas's 10th largest city. The city is also a great example of how a tree ordinance can grow over time. Their previous ordinance was lacking strength and had not been changed since 1998. The ordinance governed landscaping, screening, and buffering. Prior to updating the ordinance, any businesses could come in and remove all of the landscaping on their property without replacing it. Also, landscaping that was left in place could be neglected. The policy was more focused on shrubs than trees.

Bentonville understands that trees pay us back. Realizing the value of trees helped persuade Bentonville to make a change. For example, 100 mature trees will catch around 139,000 gallons of storm water, remove 53 tons of carbon dioxide, and remove 430 pounds of other pollutants each year. That's a cleaner community in which runoff is less of a burden. Studies have shown that people will shop longer and spend an average of 12 percent more in tree-lined areas then those that are not. Studies also show that trees result in increased home values, lowered domestic violence rates, decreased energy use, and the list goes on.

Bentonville updated their ordinance in several important ways. For commercial development they added to the street frontage buffer planting area, parallel to and including the public street right of way. They also made additional requirements for perimeter landscaping planting strips along the rear and side lot lines. Additionally, Bentonville now requires new interior parking lot landscape planting areas that are adjacent to parking and to structures.

On the residential side of the ordinance, Bentonville made changes to the requirements for newly constructed single and two family residential structures. New residential lots now require one shade tree in each yard adjacent to the right of way and one shade tree in the right of way.

The new ordinance has a lifetime landscaping guarantee, rather than three years. This prevents property owners from allowing their landscaping to die after three years. They also added a no tree topping guarantee statement. This prevents property owners from topping their trees. (Topping is the practice of removing whole tops of trees leaving stubs or lateral branches that are too small to assume the role of the terminal leader.) The city also added a section that states no healthy tree shall be removed without an approved waiver.

Bentonville's objectives were to guide good tree development. The city wanted to be able to increase shade trees and add to the overall tree canopy to create a greener and more enjoyable commercial area, increasing property values and decreasing the associated costs of storm water runoff. This policy adjustment will also reduce maintenance costs and increase long-term livability. Overall, this updated ordinance will improve the visual and natural appearance of the city, setting Bentonville as a standard to look up too.

One of the first businesses to comply with the new tree ordinance was Harps, which even went above and beyond the actual requirements. Just adding trees to the plan made a huge difference in the appeal of the store. It's great that Bentonville has companies willing to comply with the new ordinance.

Bentonville's ordinance is a living document that they will be change as needed to help improve the city over time. It serves as an excellent example of a tree ordinance. With a clear picture of what they can become, Bentonville sees the future value of their trees and are embracing that picture. If your city would like assistance with either writing a new tree ordinance or adapting an old one, there are many examples online at forestry.arkansas.gov. Or contact Patti Erwin at 479-422-0900 or Alison Litchy at 501-580-9609 for more personalized help. As the Lorax said, "Unless someone like you cares a whole awful lot, nothing is going to get better. It's not."

Take advantage of tax exemption available to your utility

By Aaron M. Benzing, P.E.

s your wastewater utility paying too much in state taxes? If your wastewater utility is paying state sales tax on equipment installed as a part of wastewater treatment projects, then the answer is probably yes. Arkansas Code Ann. § 26-52-402(a)(3) provides an exemption from state sales tax for the sales of machinery and equipment used to prevent or reduce air or water pollution. Arkansas Gross Receipts Rule GR-66 provides a somewhat more detailed explanation of this exemption. GR-66 reads that pollution control machinery and equipment are exempt from tax if they are used to prevent or reduce air or water pollution or if they are required to be installed by Arkansas or federal law to control pollution. Wastewater treatment plant equipment, including replacement and repair parts, are exempt if they are used to remove contaminants from wastewater.

GR-66 defines the treatment process to begin when solids are first removed from the waste stream and to end when all solids and other contaminants have been removed. This definition excludes collection system equipment such as wastewater pump stations, and solids handling equipment such as gravity thickeners or belt presses, from receiving the exemption. The equipment that is included in this exemption typically begins at the plant's bar screens and carries all of the way through the treatment process to disinfection.

Cities can save money by taking advantage of a sales tax exemption on certain machinery and equipment used to reduce water or air pollution, as Fort Smith did with the construction of its new clarifier at the P Street wastewater treatment plan.

The term "equipment" is not limited to the machines installed in your plant. The exemption for equipment also includes the ancillary items such as the concrete and rebar that are required as a part of the process. GR-66 does specifically exclude from the exemption, however, certain items such as handrails, ladders, paint, lighting, and monitoring or control equipment.

If your utility has not been taking advantage of this sales tax exemption on your capital improvement projects, it may be possible to retroactively recover overpayments directly from the state. In practice, we have found this to be very difficult because of the onerous task of securing the sales receipts necessary to verify exactly how much tax was paid. We have found it to be much easier for utilities to claim this exemption prior to the project bid.

Your design engineer should coordinate with the Arkansas Department of Finance and Administration (DFA) prior to releasing a project for bid, to identify the specific components of the project that are tax exempt. Next, they should work with DFA to secure the documentation that the contractor will need to prove the tax-exempt status of those items. Finally, the engineer can simply advise bidders of the specific items that are exempt from state sales tax.

The tax exemption outlined in this article is not new. Since this exemption dates back until at least as early as the 1980s, we have found it surprising that many utilities or their engineers remain unaware of its availability. A 6.5 percent reduction in equipment costs is not something that any utility can afford to leave on the table.

Persistence is one of the most beneficial qualities of a successful grant writer. It is amazing what sheer determination can make happen. The happy marriage of these various qualities will lead to successful grant writing, and I assure you that once success is yours on one project you will forever be in pursuit of the next.

One of the things I often notice in grant-writing efforts and in community development in general is the under-utilization of available resources. I've been guilty of this myself. Available resources are too often untapped. Sometimes it's by accident, sometimes it's ignorance and sometimes it's intentional, but it is never helpful. Accessing resources is a key factor in community development.

When working on a grant application or tackling any community development project, don't forget some key resources that can provide you help and guidance. Be sure to tap into these:

- Other communities—Don't feel pressured to reinvent the wheel. So many of your peers in other cities and towns have faced similar challenges. Utilize the League's list-serv or call us for help in finding out who else around the state has faced what you are facing. Adopting their best practices—or avoiding their costly mistakes—is a great result of a resource.
- Other grant applications—If imitation is the highest form of flattery then start flattering. When applying for funding with a government agency or the private sector, it pays to review previous successful applications. Pay attention to common themes in the successful applications. Note the applicant's style and any similarities. Let it become a role model for your request.
- Local business community—You might be surprised how resourceful your local business community can be. Anyone who can start a business,

- operate and survive in this challenging economy might be able to assist in your community development efforts. Local business leaders can offer great ideas, access to their business network and relationships, technical support on writing an application, and solutions to your challenges.
- Elected officials and staff—Most elected officials have staff members who are skilled, knowledgeable and willing to help municipal leaders with any undertaking. In fairness, you cannot expect the staff to work miracles. They don't have buckets of money under the desk, but they can help you cut red tape, get you in touch with the right person and give you good guidance on your efforts. Arkansans are fortunate to have great staff members working for our elected officials across the aisle and at both the federal and state levels.
- The Arkansas Municipal League—Our League is hailed across the nation as the best among its counterparts in other states. The League has developed a wide variety of services designed to provide practical assistance to its members. This includes help with legal issues, planning and zoning, grant funding and community development and much more. The League and its services are available to help you be successful as a municipal official. It starts with attending the annual conferences.

When taking on your community's biggest challenges or applying for the next grant opportunity, don't forget to look around. Your resources aren't just the articles and studies you reference in your application. They are all around you. They say no man is an island. This is certainly true when it comes to building a successful community. For more ideas on accessing these resources email me or give me a call today.

DOT approves electronic CCFs

The U.S. Department of Transportation has finally given their approval to the electronic Custody and Control Forms (CCFs) that are used for the federal drug testing. The information concerning the rule can be found in the April 13, 2015, edition of the Federal Register. Patrice M. Kelly, acting director of the Office of Drug and Alcohol Policy and Compliance, DOT, issued the report. The use of electronic custody and control forms will be included in the reprint of Part 40 DOT eCCF Notices. Employers and their service agents can begin using the e-CCFs only when the employer's laboratory has been approved by the Department of Health and Human Services national Laboratory Certification Program (NLCP). Our company will be reviewing the certification lists for the laboratories we use to see if they can comply with the e-CCF.

The final rule does not require entities to us an e-CCF. A regulated employer may continue to use the paper CCF.

When using an e-CCF, employers must establish adequate confidentiality and security measures to ensure that confidential employee records are not available to unauthorized persons. Protecting the physical security of records, access controls, and computer security measures are required. Additionally, an employer who uses an e-CCF must ensure that the collection site, the primary and split laboratories, and MRO have compatible systems, and that the employee and any other participants in the testing process will receive a legible copy of the CCF.

It is important to note that the electronic signatures are not acceptable throughout the rest of Part 40. The use of the e-CCF will create an exception so that electronic signatures will be acceptable on this form only, and not throughout the rest of Part 40.

a'TEST CONSULTANTS, Inc., provides drug and alcohol testing as a service of the Arkansas Municipal League Legal Defense Program. The program helps cities and towns comply with the U. S. Department of Transportation's required drug testing for all holders of commercial drivers' licenses.

There is a downside to this wonderful automated system and this is what will impact most of our clients. Few specimen collection sites have established any form of electronic drug testing custody and control forms at the present time. It will take time for collection sites to become compliant with the new e-CCF use. We have begun the process to use the e-CCF in our own offices. Once this program is implemented, fewer problems will occur with signatures (some donors cannot print or write their names where they can be read) and employers will not receive a result with the name listed as "illegible."

Random selection coordinator updates

We have been very pleased with the quick response from our clients in updating their employee lists for random selections. This has been so helpful and we thank you.

Due to our growth and increased requests for random management, we have restructured our staff to meet the need. Matthew Gerke will be coordinating the program and Shawn Sutton will be the data manager. We ask that all updates be addressed to Matthew Gerke or Shawn Sutton at these addresses: matthewgerke@atestinc.com or shawns@atestinc.com.

Please remember the final day to remit your updated list is the 15th day of the last month in each quarter (e.g. June 15 for 3rd quarter selections). This allows two weeks to generate names for all our clients, which is a huge undertaking. Thanks for your cooperation.

Effective collaboration at the local level

By Josh Markham, PCED

he concept of collaboration seems very straightforward. The term has gained a great deal of traction among community and economic developers as organizations and cities seek to build upon existing networks to accomplish initiatives; however, in practice, effective collaboration at the local level consistently presents challenges. As organizations, local governments, and community leaders seek to adjust to the new normal of ever tightening resources, a regional approach to community initiatives will be necessary.

Any regional initiative will require the collaboration of multiple parties. As a result, effective collaboration at the local level is now more important than ever. Successful collaborative approaches must be able to recognize that collaborative efforts are a complex process that involves connecting the unique motivations of various organizations with a clear common goal.

People often cannot agree on what it means to collaborate. This confusion is one of the most common challenges that face cities when working collaboratively. The concept of collaboration is intuitive, but the process at the local level is complex. This complexity is due in part to the nature of community and economic development.

Collaborative approaches can differ based upon what perspective a group is taking. For example, a more sociological perspective might be used by groups working on a community development initiative; these groups would emphasize a collaborative process that is based heavily upon equality and shared decision making with outcomes that seek to build awareness and better community relationships. In contrast, economic development initiatives often utilize a more business minded perspective of collaboration focused heavily upon maximizing resources for increased profit or to market an area to broader audience for business attraction.

Effective collaborative efforts at the local level must be able to bridge these two perspectives. Collaborators must seek to build relationships, maximize resources, and bring various organizations together toward a common goal. For this process to take place, local leaders must also recognize the motivations of the organizations they are seeking to work with.

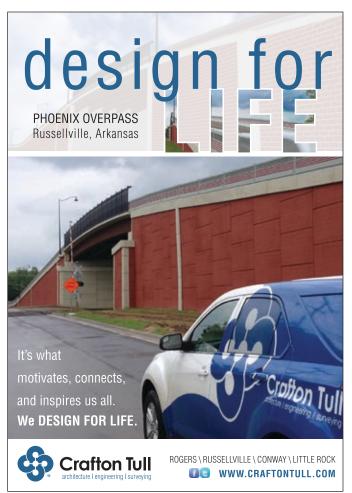

Most community organizations listen to the same radio station: WIIFM (What's in it for me?). Whether you are working with state organizations, city government representatives, private businesses, nonprofits, or community-based organizations, each group is going to have unique motivations. Understanding these differing motivations and being able to connect those motivations to a common goal can lead to successful relationships and successful collaborative efforts. A common link between these organizations is the desire to maximize resources. With the consistent pressure of limited resources and the push to work on a regional level, the necessity to collaborate becomes clearer.

Josh Markham, PCED, is assistant director of UCA's Center for Community and Economic Development. Its mission is to have a positive impact on communities by equipping leaders with economic tools and resources, building consensus to achieve community goals, and bringing UCA resources and communities together.

Elements of Successful Local Collaboration

- ♦ A clear common goal
- ♦ Understanding of participants' motivations
- ♦ A small, diverse group of core participants
- ♦ A local, well-respected champion to promote the effort
- ♦ Small-scale initial projects
- ♦ A focus on activities
- ♦ Equal share in the final outcome

Greenbrier racks up the miles in annual fitness challenge

reenbrier wrapped up its second annual Mayor's 107 Mile Challenge with a big event on April 18. The challenge was part of Greenbrier Gets Fit, a free community wellness program promoted by the city through the Melton Cotton City Event Center that was designed to encourage people to get motivated, get moving, and get fit. To participate in the challenge, individuals walked, jogged, ran or rolled 107 miles between Jan. 1 and April 18, and logged their miles online. Participants completed their last mile with Greenbrier Mayor Sammy Hartwick on April 18.

Trophies were awarded to Pam Malabanan, the overachieving individual who completed over 610 miles, and Mike Bennett, who was a close second with 601 miles. The overachieving team was the Greenbrier Church of the Nazarene, who collectively completed 3,365 miles. A spirit award went to Mike and Brenda Bennett who completed nearly 1,170 miles as a couple. Collectively, all participants logged nearly 8,500 miles. That is the distance from Greenbrier to New York City to Los Angeles, twice!

This year, Mayor Hartwick wanted to encourage participants to go above and beyond the 107 miles, and approximately 25 percent of the nearly 100 participants did just that. Also, to go above and beyond, the city added the Moustache Dash 5K, which involved 36 participants.

"That's not bad for our first 5K!" Hartwick said.

The event also included a beard and moustache contest, local vendors, a photo booth, games for children, and more.

"It is so encouraging to hear about all the positive results people are experiencing through this challenge and Greenbrier Gets Fit as a whole," said Shellie O'Quinn, director of the Melton Cotton City Event Center. "Some people just need a little motivation and encouragement to start improving their health. Creating a sense of community around an event like this can provide that. Hopefully, participants will find it becomes a way of life, and that is good for everyone! I have already heard from one individual who has set a new goal and plans to continue logging their miles throughout the year, and that encompasses the whole purpose of the program. The mayor has been behind this challenge from the very beginning and I am very thankful for his support and encouragement."

Greenbrier began its community wellness program with the help of the Arkansas Department of Health and it has been partially funded by grants from the Arkansas Coalition for Obesity Prevention. Greenbrier was recognized as an Emerging Community by ArCOP in 2014 for their efforts to improve the health of Arkansas communities. In addition to the months-long 107-mile challenge, this year's event featured a 5K on awards day in April.
